

Tokyo, the central city of Japan
Amidst the tight cluster of skyscrapers, there is a place where a forest spreads out.
This is Meiji Jingu Shrine .

There is a place where irises bloom at Meiji Jingu Shrine.
Amidst the irises in full bloom, a pale blue iris was in bloom.

This is my favorite iris, "Izumigawa".
Blue-purple streaks can be seen on the white petals.
It looks exactly like a beautiful river formed from a spring spreading throughout.

This flower blooms pale compared to other irises and is beautiful!

This flower, which was born in the late Edo period, will continue to tell the history of Japan together with Meiji Jingu Shrine.

When early summer comes, let's go see them again
