

Daiki Inagaki
Graduate School of Agriculture
Tamagawa University

TSURU NO KEGOROMO

I fell in love at first sight. The name of that flower is TSURU NO KEGOROMO.

I was captivated by its beautiful color. Even the famous poet Matsuo Basho used it in his haiku. He emphasized grace and beauty by comparing it to the feathers of a crane. In Japanese culture, cranes are symbols of beauty and longevity, and their feathers are known for their white and beautiful appearance. To me, it looked like a wedding dress, exuding elegance and splendor.

I hope my future bride will wear a wedding dress that is as elegant and beautiful as this flower.

What did you feel when you saw this flower?